

This comment is in reference to any proposed legislation to preempt Indiana's no-call list. I have not received more than three or four calls in the last nine months that I would consider intrusive. Among these were a newspaper and a telephone survey from Pizza Hut. Before the current list went into effect, we were interrupted at least three or four times PER DAY!

My wife is a nurse who works twelve hour night shifts, and she had to turn off the phone. Therefore, I would not have been able to reach had there been an emergency, but it was necessary so that she could perform her duties efficiently and safely.

My understanding is that credit cards I currently use and have used in the past could legally harass me if the national "Do Not Call" rule goes into effect. Unless a customer is not living up to a contract, I see no reason whatsoever why they deserve to be bothered during dinner more than anyone else.

Please allow the Indiana no-call list to remain in effect. It is my choice not to be bothered. I would welcome any federal legislation to limit telephone solicitations, so long as states can place further restrictions.

Thank you.
